[Peck's Sun.] A boy and a dog make the greatest of chums. A boy who owns a dog is well provided with good company. They are true | and pursuit. Two groups are presented, and friends and neither would think of such a the contrast is striking. On the one side thing as going back on the other. Their friendship for each other is true' and faithful. If you meet one you are pretty sure to see the other near by, and if one gets into a report." Here are the "virtues," and there quarrel, the other is sure to take a hand in | are the "praises." Here is strength, and it. Did you ever notice a boy and a dog that have been together any length of time? Of course you have. Why, thee understand each other as well, and better, in fact, than two boys would. The dog knows exactly what his little master means when he speaks. and will stick up his ears, turn his head on one side then on the other and look the boy in the face but human expression all his countenance when he is being talked to. It is, "love me, love my dog" with every toy. To insult one is to insult the other, and an ir salt to each is resented by both. Why, you could no more buy that dog of his young master than you could hire him to kill his best friend. The wag of that dog's tail is of more value to the boy than anything else, aside, may be, his mother's love, in the world. A dog is a most excellent companion to give a boy. That domb brute will be true even to death to the boy, and his faithfulness to his young friend does, to a certain extent, create a true and faithful disposition in the boy toward his friends. A boy is generally in good company when he and his dog go out into the woods and fields, and the parent has a reasonable feeling of security for the boy in such com-

International Lessons-By Henry M. Grout. D. D .- May 17 .- Christian Contentment.

-Phil. 4:4-13. GOLDEN TEXT .- The God of peace be with you.

-Phil. 4:9. The Christians at Philippi were among the most faithful of all those to whom Paul wrote, and yet they had their weakness, temptations, and trials. Persecuted and poor, they were subject to discouragement and discontent. It was to cheer them in their troubles and to help them to a more joyful trust, and he penned this particular portion of his letter. It was to let them into the secret of Christian serenity, even in the midst of hardships and trials. And note in general how he assumes that true peace, however it comes, comes of God. He is its source. Without his smiling presence we shall find it in no place and by no means. This comes out very distinctly in the seventh and ninth verses. "The peace of God shall keep your minds and hearts." "And the God of peace shall be with you." The Apostle speaks as if all good were summed up in that. 1 Make it a principle, and have it as rule, always to rejoice (4-7). "Rejoice al way: again I will say, rejoice." That is to say, you can rejoice, and you ought to re-joice, and you ought to do it always; you have abundant reason for so doing, and therefore it is your privilege and your duty. | A Worse Enemy to the Queen's English Do not go about with a downcast face; look up! Do not ferever brood over your trou-

But here comes a caution. There are kinds of rejoicing which are shallow and hollow, and kinds which are sinful. There always be intrenched behind soft and gentle hollow, and kinds which are sinful. Therefore, he says, see that your joys are such as become Christian disciples, Find your happiness in activities, companionships. treasures and hopes he approves. 'Rejoice in the Lord"—the Lord Jesus.

Paul knew very well that this is not always easy. He anticipated the objection sure to arise in the minds of these Philippian disciples. They would say, "How can we rejoice? We are persecuted, and we are poor." The fifth and sixth verses are an answer to these objections. (a) "Are you persecuted? Do others treat you ill? What then? Will you be downcast and overwhelmed with sorrow? There is a better way, namely, that of patient trust. Your Savior, Defender, Rewarder is not far off; he is now near; in due time here or hereaf. ter he will interpose for you. Therefore 'Let your moderation, your patience be known unto all men; the Lord is at hand," (b) But they were also poor, and so he goes on to counsel them with respect to this trial. "Even poverty should not burden you with care. God knows your want, and he is gracious and rich, and you can trust him to do what is best, therefore, 'In nothing be anxious.' Carry your want to God, Tell him your needs and fears. Do this with thanksgivings. Do it in everything. Pray and

Is not here a grand secret? "The Lord is at hand." "The Lord will provide." He who cherishes such trust will find the promise sure: "The peace of God which passeth all understanding shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus."

pure, whatsoever things are lovely and of good report, think on these things; these things do." It may be doubted if many readers of this chapter have observed that the Apostle is still enforcing the secret of Christian serenity. But that such is the fact is made evident by the conclusion to which he here again comes:

soever things are true, honorable, just and

Thus think and do, "and the God of peace shall be with you. The argument is that, with such thoughts and pursuits, we have the comforting sense of God's presence, and his presence in reality. And so conscience is at rest; from the tortur ing sense of wrong, ane from the distressing apprehension that God is against us, we are free. Then, in God's smile there is light. But that is not all. How few persons seem ever to consider that by our thoughts and moral conduct we make the world in which we live. It is thus that we ourselves fill it with darkness or light. He who thinks of | foresee the end. things true, honorable, just, pure, lovely and of good report, and who does such deeds, dwells in quite another world from that of one of other thoughts and pursuits. He is in a region above ordinary cares and troubles. What if the world does frown? What if poverty does pinch? Our real world, our cherished tressures, are elsewhere. But we should not fail to note a certain interesting and important distinction in the things here commended as objects of thought there are "whatsoever things are true, honorable, just and pure;" on the other side whatsoever things are lovely and of good there is beauty. And what is said is that we are to think of both. ard put both into action. We are not to cultivate either side of thought and character without the other. The "virtues" alone would give strength and steadfastness, but without the grace which wins. The "prises" alone might please at first, but would at length appear weak, worthless, contemptible. And so we are to think first of the virtues. but are not to forget the praises. "A Christian should be like a tree, which has first its firm root and upright stem, and then also its spreading branches and waving twigs, which yield to the breeze and salute the gentlest movements of the surrounding air." And right thinking and doing will not only tend to ensure serenity, but will also help to form such a character. Learn to trust the wisdom and grace which have appointed our earthly lot (10 13). From exhortation the Apostle now passes to personal experience. The Philippian Christians had just renewed their former kindnesses by fresh ministries to his need. He thanks them for it. It gladdens his heart. But, then, he goes on to add that he should not have been distressed without it. "For," he saye. "I kave learned in whatsoever state I am, therein to be content." He will accept whatever lot of good or ill God may appoint, and still trust and rejoice. Do not fail to notice the true meaning of no Christian virtue. Contentment means large enough to contain all he is, or needs to do, or can become. It is to feel that, in contained: it is the feeling that one's lot is his strength that he was able both to be "abased" and to "abound." "I can do all things in him that strengtheneth me." Here is Christian serenity and contentment; a good within the reach of all. To it the world is a stranger." To it every Christian ought to be able to testify.

1. Gloomy Christians make it appear as if it were a hard thing to be "in the Lord." 2. If a long face is no sign of piety, neither is flippant joke and empty laughter.

3. The Apostle would have us "rejoice always," and "in nothing be anxious"; have we regarded that as possible? 4. Paul would have us first think, and then do. As a man thinketh so is he. He who thinks evil will come to do it. 5. Do not say, "I cannot help my thoughts."

Paul assumes the opposite. Keep this evil out by keeping good in. 6. Thinking should never be made a substitute for doing. God has no rewards for those who think and "say and do not." 7. Who is so free, so independent, so rich, as he who has learned to be content with much or little? Just that is one of the lessons Christ would teach us, and enable us to practise. Happy Christian!

THE SLANG EPIDEMID. Than Bad Grammar.

[Cincinnati Commercial Gazette. | Slang is breaking down social conventionalities by its free and indiscriminate use. It speech. It is deteriorating the standard that we once held for our young men, and is unquestionably a vice making its inroads as insiduously as drink or gambling. Our children are allowed to interlard their conversation with the catch-words of low comedies. without remonstrances, which must in the end produce its effect upon character and conduct. Slang is a reflection upon the progress of our civilization, and if not repressed will soon become a prevailing feature of our popular literature. Our schools should be the reformatories for its cure. The principles of correct speaking are simple enough to be conveyed intelligently to the youngest children, and it should be impressed upon them that the use of pure diction is one of the stepping stones toward building up a pure character.

It is pitiable to listen to the conversation of the average school girl of to-day, whose lips should be as unsullied as the bloom upon her cheek. I will leave it to the initiated to interpret the meaning of the following phrases, selected at random, but actually uttered by some of the rapresentatives of our first-class schools and seminaries:

"Didn't we have Jim dandy fun to-day at "Yes, but the old dragon got on her ear because we didn't know our Latin." "Gee whiz! I don't care."

"Jimeny, cracky! She's a daisy." "Did you catch on?" "Yes: I tumbled to the racket." 2. Give place in thought and deed only to "Did you know that Jack Smith had blown things holy and good (8, 9). "Finally, whatout most of his fortune?"

"You bet; he intends to fly high. The governor has to shell out the sheckels." "Well, it is a comfort to have as much lough as a person wants." "I saw him making a break along the "Awfully jolly!" "Awfully funny!"

"Take the cake?" "I should smile!" "What But it is needless to multiply the expressions ad infinitum. Do not such examples of slang confront us as a horrible nightmare? Does it not plainly show that the tendency is increasing to an alarming degree? It is bringing the conversation of our sons and daughters down to the level of thieves' jargon, and fast obliterating all delicacy of the sentiment in the minds of both establishing a freemasonry of course and corrupt language as a means of social intercourse. The descent is easy which leads to vulgarity in thought, and it is a wise parent who can

A WAR INCIDENT. The Love Between Master and Slave as Shown at Island No. 10.

OfGeneral Alpheus Baker, now of this city, but formerly a citizen of Eufaula, Ala., a lawyer by profession, and an orator of great sweetness of diction and power, the following incident is related: He owned a slave called Paris, before the war and at the time the first gun was fired on Sumter. The slave was a huge negro, very dark in complexion, six feet two in stature, and correspondingly large in frame,

"Well, Paris, what are you going to do?" Paris replied: "Well, massa, with the help of God, I'm going back to missus and de chil'ern." The two old friends, who had been boys together on the old plantation in the "Land of Rest," and were about the same age, shook hands in silence and in tears. Paris turned to go, but he'd gone but a few feet away from his master when he turned toward him again, his soul swelling up from its lowest depths and his countenance all aglow with the fervor of pure affection, and rushed into
